That gave Ann the confidence to form her own actions, and this sometimes irritated Muriel. At the age of thirteen, Muriel ran away from home to attend a Christian secondary school in Christchurch. When she returned home again, her mother kept her and her sister in the strict English tradition. They were never allowed to play soccer or rugby. They were educated in the classroom (with some help from Muriel's aunt), and they were expected to be well-behaved at all times. This was a radical departure from their previous life in the South Island, where all four children had had a life of sheer freedom, but the rules could be enforced if the parents were paying attention and discipline was backed by supervision. As time went on
